

Centre for Studies in Social Justice Presents:

Turning First Rate Universities into Second Rate Companies - the Future of Post-Secondary Education in Canada?

Wednesday, March 24, 4:00 p.m.
McPherson Lounge

James Turk
Executive Director
Canadian Association of University Teachers

Commercial and corporate values and practices are transforming our universities in subtle and profound ways. The very integrity of our institutions and their mission to advance and disseminate knowledge and educate students is at risk. The talk will explore the changes that are taking place, the reasons for the changes and what academic staff and students can do to reclaim and protect the role of our universities in serving the public interest.

James Turk is the Executive Director of the Canadian Association of University Teachers. He has written extensively on education, academic freedom, civil liberties and related public policy issues. His most recent book is Universities at Risk: How Politics, Special Interests and Corporatization Are Threatening Academic Integrity.

Jim is a member of the Executive and of the Board of Directors of the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives.

Refreshments will be provided.
